IN WALL: BLOW SAFE

They Escape With $1,500 After Lowering Big Strongbox Into

Basement of Butcher Shop. When Louis Seitz, a clerk, opened the butcher shop of Isidor Blank at the southeast corner of Seventy-sixth Street and Second Avenue, this morning, he found the big safe was missing. The icebox in the rear of the store was open and Seitz could see right through a hole in the wall into Investigating further, he found the safe in the cellar, empty, with the door blown off. The sum of $1,500. Saturday's receipts from the Second Avenue store and another store in First Avenue, which Mr. Blank had put in the safe Saturday night, were missing.

Investigation showed burglars enthree the store early to-day by cutting with a crowbar and axes, through the west wail of the ground floor hallway of No. 300 East Seventy-sixth Street. The back of the occubox rested against this wall and the box rested against this wall and the burglars kept on hacking until they got into the icebox. With a crowbar or a jimmy, they forced a door of the icebox outward and entered the butcher shop.

They rolled the safe, which was 6 feet high and 5 feet wide, to a trap door in the rear of the store and dropped it into the cellar onto a pile of bags. Then they blew the safe and escaped.
